I love art to its core. It has a personality in itself- everyone has a different style. I'd like to have the opportunity to teach children, as their acknowledgement for their own style is not fully developed.

They will have so much fun exploring/ experimenting all the funky techniques that can be used.

I truly want to let young creative minds know that art is not just beautiful drawings on paper, its emotion, style and what techniques/materials you want to use as a untiy to express a work of art.

As they realise this, they will have such a broader perception of what they can create as they won't feel limited to thinking the generic clichés of art and that their ability to create brilliant art is not determined by age but experience.

My year 12 Art TEE teacher is my inspiration. She taught me so much within just 2 years of my life and I had learnt more than my previous decade of exploring art on my own. Because of this I'd like to share my insight too.
